

Boob fall Amy left in agony

A trip back to the hospital . . . boob-job Amy

BOOZY TUMBLE STAR IN CLINIC

AMY Winehouse was back in hospital last night suffering fresh agony from her new boobs — after she drunkenly fell and bruised them.

The pop diva, 26 — who just weeks ago told doctors the 32D implants were giving her gyp — landed flat on her face, also cutting her forehead.

She summoned minders to whisk her back to the private clinic in London's Harley Street where she had her boob job seven months ago. She was diagnosed with bruised ribs, kept in overnight on Sunday — but yesterday was still refusing to leave. Her injuries were described as "not serious" but her agent said: "She really likes the clinic so may stay a few days."

Fuming

A hospital source told how the Back To Black singer — who fell over while drinking alone at her North London flat — was brought in plastered and caused chaos.

The witness said: "Amy was running up and down the corridors with her top off and reeking of booze."

"She has been heard complaining of pain caused by bruising on her breasts and around her ribs. The nurses had to step in and ask her to calm down. Eventually she had to be taken back to her room. The ward sister was absolutely fuming."

Another source said of the tumble: "She'd had a few."

"At first she thought she had broken something, so got her security to take her to hospital. The doctors were worried she might be concussed because she had a big bump on her head and a cut above her eye."

When Amy returned to the clinic earlier this month she feared she might have to get the implants removed.

But doctors gave her the all clear.
